5 China’s New Leaders by BO Zhiyue

The fourth generation leadership under Hu Jintao transferred its power to the fifth generation leadership under Xi Jinping at the 18th National Party Congress. The Congress elected a central committee of 376 members and a central disciplinary commission of 130 members. Hu Jintao also retired from the Central Military Commission.

14 China’s New Supreme Command and Politics of Central Military Commission by YOU Ji

The 18th Central Military Commission (CMC) is a transitional team because the top soldier and two other members can only serve for one term, if not shorter. Yet this new CMC is capable of commanding the PLA effectively.

25 The Making of the 18th Party Central Committee by Lance L P GORE

Despite the various loopholes, the six-phased cadre performance evaluation system widely adopted at local power succession does impose some constraints on arbitrary power, enhancing its legitimacy and promoting its institutionalisation.

36 Social Management: China Goes beyond Maintaining Social Stability by SHAN Wei

China’s “social management” strategy is a modification of the “maintaining stability” system which has turned out to be incompetent and socioeconomically costly. This new strategy attempts to manage growing civil society with provision of social services, more flexible control of various social sectors and new policy of social organisations.

47 China Curbs Official Extravagance by CHEN Gang

Chinese official extravagance on vehicles, banquets and overseas trips at public expense (“three public expenses”) has been censured by taxpayers as China’s fiscal revenue more than quadrupled over the past decade. China’s long history of political ranking distinguished by lavish spending is an embedded factor behind the “three expenses”.

55 Social Health Insurance in China: Getting the Incentive Right by QIAN Jiwei

About 1.2 billion of China’s population is now covered by social health insurance. In 2011, various social insurance plans took up 25% of total health expenditure. Issues to be addressed for social health insurance include shallow financial coverage, high surpluses, opportunistic behaviours and an underdeveloped private insurance sector.

72 China’s Educated Underemployment by HUANG Yanjie

China’s college graduates are suffering from various types of underemployment, especially manifested in a skill-job mismatch. This is the result of a shortfall in university education and structural problems in the economy. The problem of educated underemployment will require reforms in both higher education and the economic structure.

83 Taiwan’s Social Welfare System in Predicament after Expansion by QI Dongtao

Democratisation and highly competitive electoral politics in the past two decades have driven Taiwan’s social welfare system to expand rapidly. The expanded social welfare system has also generated an increasingly positive redistributive effect on income equality in Taiwan. However, financial sustainability is its largest challenge.

91 The 2012 Chief Executive Election in Hong Kong and the Challenges for the Chinese Authorities by Joseph Yu-shek CHENG

It has been generally expected that the Chief Executive of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region has to be someone trusted by the Chinese leadership and accepted by the local business community. This is to retain investors’ confidence in order to maintain Hong Kong’s stability and prosperity.

104 Political Economy of Japanese Free Trade Network with ASEAN: Implications for Sino-Japanese Rivalry in East Asia by Chika YAMAMOTO

Is Japanese involvement in free trade agreements (FTA) with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) part of a regional competition with China over leadership in East Asia? This article redefines it as an essential agenda to serve various economic and political domestic interests of Japan.

114 The 2012 Diaoyu Islands Contretemps by Katherine TSENG Hui-yi

The 2012 rows over Diaoyu Islands were caused by Japan’s nationalisation of the islands. Ensuing miscalculation further exacerbated the dispute which requires new perceptions, efficient measures and firmer political wills for conflict management.
